For five years I have been engaged in the publication of the Indual Magarine, in the cities of St. Louis and Chicago. The entire work, including composition, presswork, and editing, is done exclusively by women. It is the only magazine in this country that has been published wholly, except as to contributors, by the hand and brains of women. Moreover, the Indual is conceded to be the representative magazine of the west; the exponent, indeed, of manazine literature west of the Alleghanies. Buring these five years I have struggled against odds to keep my magazine alive. Thave succeeded, and at the same time carried out my theory, of employing females solely. I design now to get out a grand illustrated Centennial number of one hundred thousand explies, whilen number of the work manufactory, 383 M.
